Hazardous Weather

Hazardous Weather

A weak cold front to the north will combine with gulf moisture for numerous showers and thunderstorms. Nuisance flooding of low-lying and poorly draining areas is possible in any of the heavier showers and storms. Be sure to slow down and use caution out on the roadways.

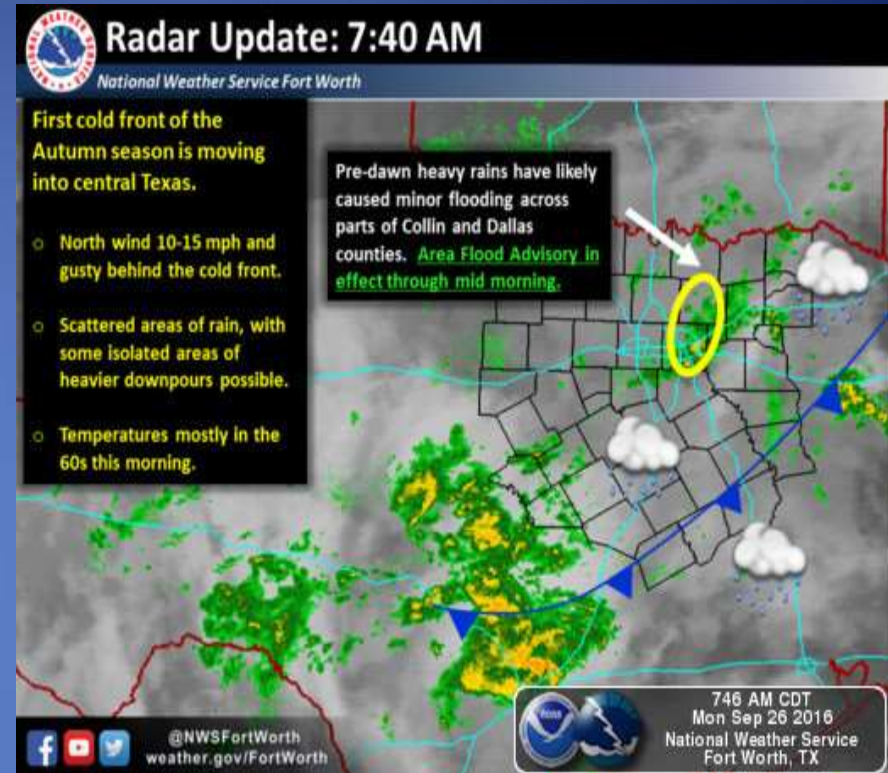

Scattered to numerous showers and thunderstorms east this morning, with rainfall chances increasing farther west in the afternoon as the atmosphere destabilizes and a frontal boundary approaches. It will be cooler today, in part due to the clouds and rainfall, with highs in the 80s.

Hazardous Weather

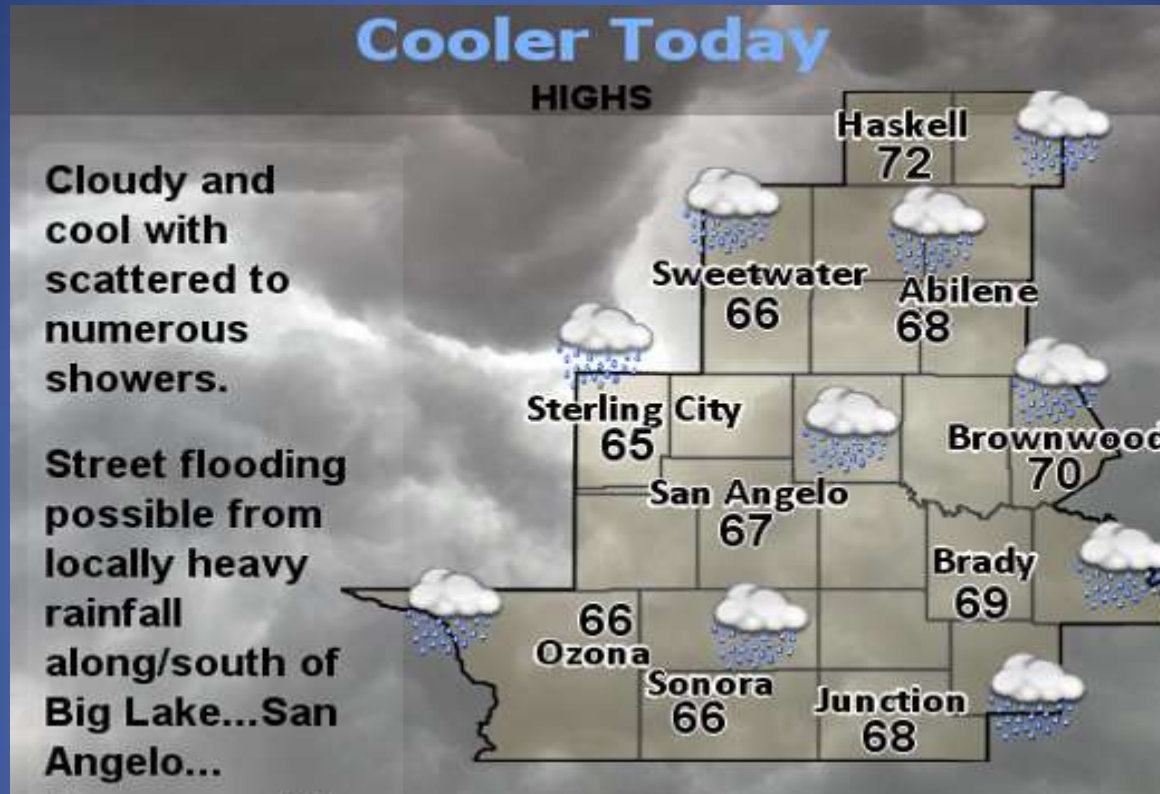

It will certainly feel like fall across Southeast New Mexico and West Texas today, as high temperatures are only expected to range from the upper 50s to lower 70s with breezy northeast winds. Rain showers are possible throughout the day, with the chance for showers gradually shifting south through this afternoon. There could also be a few isolated thunderstorms across the Lower Trans Pecos and Big Bend Area, where locally heavy rainfall will be possible.

A cold front will move slowly south across Central TX through mid morning. Scattered areas of rain with isolated thunder will be possible with the cold front. Flood Advisories are in effect for parts of Dallas and Collin counties through 8:45 a.m. Though much of the rain is diminished, flooding of poor drainage areas and side roads remains possible. Otherwise, north winds and temperatures in the lower-mid 60s is making for a more Fall feel outdoors this morning.

Hazardous Weather

Localized rainfall amounts up to an inch are possible...along and south of a Big Lake... San Angelo...Brownwood line. Street flooding will be the main threat. Cooler otherwise with highs in the mid and upper 60s and north winds 10 to 15 mph.
